The Appellate Division though the divorce might be recognied in other States by comity, New York State has consistently refused to recognize such a decree as binding upon a party who, at the time of the action in a foreign State, was a citizen of this State. The sole custody of the tenyear-old daughter of the Kaizers was awarded to Mr. Kaizer.

O you think that peculiar. It took her some time to do as also intended, for she was trying to dall Lionel Waldron. His valet gave her a number, and the mum who answered criminal for pure love of gave her another, and finally she defying the law, to get excitement "Mr. Waldron?" she asked. "Yes." "This is Madam Madcap!" She could hear his gasp over the wire, and knew that he was fighting to control himself. "And to what am I indebted for the pleasure of this call?" he caked or "And what are you going to do "Oh, I am through with this sort of thing for a time," she said. "All I thing for a time." she said. "All the bave to do is remove my mask, get a few blocks away, and nobody can identify me as Madam Madcap or cause me annoyance. Simple, isn't it?" "And—what about me?" "And—what about me?" "And—what about me?" "Why, I'll leave you here," she said. He sprang to his feet and clutched "And to what am I indebted for the said." "Kindly put all surcasm aside," she said. "You'll probably be glad of this call. I understand that you are initially many that you may have him. I am through with him—he is of no further use to me." "What do you mean?" Waldren gaspen.

"Why, I'll leave you here," she said.

Why, I'll leave you here," she said.

Why, I'll leave you here," she said.

"What do you mean."

"Exactly what I say. On, he is still alive, if that is what is troubling you! And I am going to tell you where you may find him—on certain conditions."

"What are the conditions?" Waitered.

"Nobody?" Madain Madeap answered. "You'll have pienty of solitude in which to think of your crimes and mindemiennors."

"I-fil starve!"

"Oh, I hope not! I understand that it is a terrible death." Madam Madeap shid, laughing cruelly.

"You're playing with me!"

"An I? Wait and see." she said.

"Perhaps you will be fortunate enough to have somebody rolesse yon —and then you will have a little task a head of you—convincing people that you have not become a criminal because of your infatuation for a woman."

"Again I ask you why you have done this thing." Why have you tried to ruin me?" he cried. "What time I would not be bothered by anybody."

"Nothing—to me."

"I do not care to discuss anything more." she said. "Think about it you'll laive plenty of time, and you'll not be bothered by anybody."

Without another word, she turned her back upon him and started toward the door.

"Wait!" he screeched. "Don't go saway and leave me like this! I'll starve! I'll de of thirst!"

"Even that," she said, "would be better than a living death. Just think—lincy would it be if you really were imprisoned for life?"

"Wait!" he implored again. "I'll do anything you say! Only let me out of here!"

She opened the door and turned to regard him. The eyes glittering through the slits in her mass seemed to him to become things of flame. And so she looked at him for a time, and then, despite his shricks for mercy, she went out and closed and looked the door.

"CHAPTER XV.

And so she looked at him for a time, and then, despite his shricks for mercy, she went out and closed and locked the door.

Sambo was in the lower hall, and she called to him

"It is about done, Sambo," she said when he hung up the receiver and went out upon the street and went out upon the street. "Tse ready if y'all does, miss."

"I know that, Sambo. You at least, sensed a trick at first, believing that are loyal. But the little game is about over. You will leave the house get him to withdraw his men from the Darcan place and take them far haps you can make some extra money and, and so he called to him only young again a man to drive the limousine for you. I may need it presence of mind in emergencies, cx plaints, some time."

"Yes, miss." Sambo said.

She gave him a couple of bills.
"Ain't dey nothin' class foh me to do?" Sambo asked.

"Not now," she replied, "You have done wonderfully well, and you know how I appreciate it. Just have a good time for a few days, Sambo: Fill send for you before long."

"Yes, miss."

"There is just one thing you can do for me. Watch this place from a safe distance, and about midnight tonight, if there is nobody left herenobody. Sambo—lock the place up, and keep the keys until I send for you."

"I un'ersis a's miss."

"And then he opened the door and stepped inside.
